DECISION

LEONEN, J.:

A petition for continuing mandamus may be filed when a government agency, instrumentality, or officer unlawfully neglects the performance of an act in connection with the enforcement or violation of the environmental law, regulation, or right, or excludes another person from the use or enjoyment of that right.¹ It “should mainly involve an environmental and other related law, rule, regulation, or a right therein.”²

Clearly, the Petition for a Writ of Continuing Mandamus before this Court does not involve any ecological right nor does it allege any right involving protection of the environment or the ecology. It mainly invokes alleged violations on the right to health. Thus, petitioners cannot resort to this kind of writ. Even if it does, the Petition must be dismissed for insufficiency of substance. The acts sought by petitioners to be performed are not enjoined by law as a duty. They are not ministerial acts.

A writ of continuing mandamus should not be issued when it, directly or indirectly, substitutes judicial discretion for executive or legislative prerogatives. Thus, every petition for a writ of continuing mandamus should clearly allege: (a) the serious and systematic inability of the respondents to meet their constitutional or statutory obligations to protect and preserve the environment despite repeated demands; (b) convincing circumstances that the non-issuance of the writ will result in to irreparable damage to our ecology within the scope provided in our rules; and (c) specific, measurable, attainable, realistic, and timebound objectives that have rational relation to the irreparable damage sought to be avoided.

Furthermore, judicial relief related to health and environmental rights should always be based upon reasonable, sufficient, scientific as well as established and sufficient empirical basis.

The Petition fails to comply with all these.

This Court resolves a Petition for Mandamus³ under Rule 65 filed by 74 children, represented by their parents (collectively, petitioners) who were inoculated with Dengvaxia,⁴ the dengue vaccine developed by Sanofi Pasteur. The Petition, which was directly filed before this Court, seeks the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus⁵ against Dr. Francisco T. Duque III (Duque), Dr. Lyndon L. Lee Suy, Nela Charade G. Puno, RPh, Hon. Leonor Magtolis Briones, and Hon. Catalino S. Cuy (collectively, respondents), who are all government officials involved in the implementation of the Dengvaxia vaccination program. Petitioners allege that respondents failed to protect the right to health of those who were subjected to the Department of Health's dengue immunization program. Petitioners claim that they were used as "guinea pigs" in an experiment conducted by the government and pharmaceutical giant Sanofi Pasteur.⁶

In December 2015, during the Climate Change Summit in Paris, France, former President Benigno C. Aquino III and Department of Health Secretary Janette Garin (Garin) met with officials of Sanofi Pasteur to discuss Dengvaxia.⁷ Back then, Dengvaxia was expected to be the first vaccine against the dengue virus.⁸

Subsequently, Garin proposed to procure 3 million doses of Dengvaxia to the Department of Budget and Management. A few days later, the Food and Drug Administration approved Dengvaxia for consumption.⁹ The Department of Health Family Health Office then requested to exempt Dengvaxia from the assessment of the Philippine National Formulary, which is a requirement for government procurement.¹⁰

The Department of Budget and Management then issued a ₱3.5 billion Special Allotment Release Order for the purchase of Dengvaxia.¹¹

In February 2016, the Philippine Children's Medical Center requested for the procurement of 600,000 vials of Dengvaxia. A Certificate of Exemption was later issued in favor of Dengvaxia.¹²

After Garin issued the disbursement voucher, the Philippine Children's Medical Center purchased Dengvaxia vials from Zuellig Pharma, the local distributor of the vaccine.¹³

Through a series of memoranda, the Department of Health and the Department of Interior and Local Government announced the implementation of the school-based dengue vaccination program in National Capital Region,

Region III, and Region IV-A. The program covers all elementary students nine years old and above.¹⁴

In July 2016, Garin's successor, Department of Health Secretary Paulyn Ubial (Ubial), issued a resolution suspending the vaccination program over safety concerns.¹⁵ However, Ubial later lifted the suspension and even expanded its coverage to include Cebu, citing the historically large number of dengue cases in the region.¹⁶

During the program's implementation, numerous studies emerged stating the adverse effects of the vaccine.¹⁷ This prompted Congress to conduct separate investigations on the safety and efficacy of the vaccination program, as well as its procurement process.¹⁸

In November 2017, Sanofi Pasteur released an updated information on Dengvaxia, which stated that the vaccine is only beneficial to those "who had [a] prior infection"¹⁹ and that those who were not previously infected by the dengue virus may develop "cases of severe disease . . . following vaccination upon a subsequent dengue infection."²⁰ Sanofi Pasteur did not recommend vaccination to those who had no history of dengue.²¹

Following this advisory, Ubial's successor, Duque suspended the implementation of the dengue vaccination program on December 1, 2017.²² Following this announcement, the Food and Drug Administration suspended the sale, marketing, and distribution of Dengvaxia.²³

In December 2017, petitioners filed a Petition for Mandamus²⁴ before this Court. Subsequently, respondents filed their Comment,²⁵ to which petitioners filed their Reply.²⁶

In a February 18, 2020 Resolution,²⁷ this Court required the parties to submit their respective memoranda, to which petitioners²⁸ and respondents²⁹ complied.

Through their parents, petitioner-children who were inoculated with Dengvaxia assert that they possess the standing to file the present case. They allege that they sustained a direct and substantial injury because of the vaccination program, claiming that their health and very lives were put at risk because of Dengvaxia.³⁰

Other petitioners are suing as citizens, taxpayers, and legislators.³¹ Alternatively, they argue that this Court can exercise liberality on the requirement of legal standing considering that the right to health, the core issue involved in this case, is a matter of transcendental importance.³²

Petitioners claim that the Petition does not violate the doctrine of hierarchy of courts. Although petitioners concede that this Court's original jurisdiction over petitions for mandamus is not exclusive, they argue that the present case falls under the exceptions to the general rule.³³ They cite several of the exceptions enumerated in The Diocese of Bacolod v. Commission on Elections,³⁴ namely: "when the issues involved are of transcendental importance," "the time element presented in this case cannot be ignored," "petitioners rightly claim that they had no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy from the ordinary course of law that could free them from the injurious effects of respondents' acts," and "the petition includes questions that are dictated by public welfare and the advancement of public policy, or demanded by the broader interest of justice."³⁵

In particular, petitioners stress that the risks and effects of Dengvaxia on their health and lives have far-reaching implications. Time element is present in this petition because petitioners are already experiencing health issues allegedly caused by the vaccine. They further claim that direct redress to this Court is justified by the lack of other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy and the public welfare and policy issues they raised.³⁶

Petitioners claim that respondents failed "to protect the right to health of every Filipino,"³⁷ a duty mandated by the Constitution and other relevant laws.³⁸

Article II, Section 15: The State shall protect and promote the right to health of the people and instill health consciousness among them.
Article XIII, Section 11: The State shall adopt an integrated and comprehensive approach to health development which shall endeavor to make essential goods, health and other social services available to all the people at affordable cost. There shall be priority for the needs of the underprivileged sick, elderly, disabled, women, and children. The State shall endeavor to provide free medical care to paupers.

Petitioners also cite Articles 3 and 11 of Presidential Decree No. 603.³⁹ They also mention some provisions of international conventions to which the Philippines is a state party.⁴⁰

Article XIII, Section 12: The State shall establish and maintain an effective food and drug regulatory system and undertake appropriate health manpower development and research, responsive to the country's health needs and problems.

Article XV, Section 3(2): The State shall defend: (2) The right of children to assistance, including proper care and nutrition, and special protection from all forms of neglect, abuse, cruelty, exploitation, and other conditions prejudicial to their development[.]

³⁹ Id. at 471-472, citing Presidential Decree No. 603, art. 3, which provides:

Article 3. Rights of the Child. - All children shall be entitled to the rights herein set forth without distinction as to legitimacy or illegitimacy, sex, social status, religion, political antecedents, and other factors.

(1) Every child is endowed with the dignity and worth of a human being from the moment of his conception, as generally accepted in medical parlance, and has, therefore, the right to be born well.

(3) Every child has the right to a well-rounded development of his personality to the end that he may become a happy, useful and active member of society.

....
(4) Every child has the right to a balanced diet, adequate clothing, sufficient shelter, proper medical attention, and all the basic physical requirements of a healthy and vigorous life.

(5) Every child has the right to be brought up in an atmosphere of morality[.]

(8) Every child has the right to protection against exploitation, improper influences, hazards, and other conditions or circumstances prejudicial to his physical, mental, emotional, social and moral development.

(9) Every child has the right to live in a community and a society that can offer him an environment free from pernicious influences and conducive to the promotion of his health and the cultivation of his desirable traits and attributes.

(11) Every child has the right to an efficient and honest government that will deepen his faith in democracy and inspire him with the morality of the constituted authorities both in their public and private lives.

Article 11. Promotion of Health. - The promotion of the Child's health shall begin with adequate pre-natal and post-natal care both for him and his mother. All appropriate measures shall be taken to insure his normal total development.

It shall be the responsibility of the health, welfare, and educational entities to assist the parents in looking after the health of the child.

⁴⁰ Id. at 470, citing Article 12 of the International Covenant on Economic, Social and Cultural Rights, which provides:

1. The States Parties to the present Covenant recognize the right of everyone to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health.

2. The steps to be taken by the States Parties to the present Covenant to achieve the full realization of this right shall include those necessary for:

(a) The provision for the reduction of the stillbirth-rate and of infant mortality and for the healthy development of the child;

(b) The improvement of all aspects of environmental and industrial hygiene;

(c) The prevention, treatment and control of epidemic, endemic, occupational and other diseases;

(d) The creation of conditions which would assure to all medical service and medical attention in the event of sickness.

Article 24 of the Convention on the Rights of the Child states:

1. States Parties recognize the right of the child to the enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of health and to facilities for the treatment of illness and rehabilitation of health. States Parties shall strive to ensure that no child is deprived of his or her right of access to such health care services.

2. States Parties shall pursue full implementation of this right and, in particular, shall take appropriate measures:

a. To diminish infant and child mortality;

b. To ensure the provision of necessary medical assistance and health care to all children with emphasis on the development of primary health care;

c. To combat disease and malnutrition, including within the framework of primary health care, through, inter alia, the application of readily available technology and through the provision of adequate nutritious foods and clean drinking-water, taking into consideration the dangers and risks of environmental pollution;

d. To ensure appropriate pre-natal and post-natal health care for mothers;

Petitioners likewise highlight the mandate of the Department of Health under the Administrative Code as the “sole provider of health services”⁴¹ as well as the Food and Drug Administration’s regulatory functions.⁴²

e. To ensure that all segments of society, in particular parents and children, are informed, have access to education and are supported in the use of basic knowledge of child health and nutrition, the advantages of breastfeeding, hygiene and environmental sanitation and the prevention of accidents;

f. To develop preventive health care, guidance for parents and family planning education and services.

3. States Parties shall take all effective and appropriate measures with a view to abolishing traditional practices prejudicial to the health of children.

4. States Parties undertake to promote and encourage international co-operation with a view to achieving progressively the full realization of the right recognized in the present article. In this regard, particular account shall be taken of the needs of developing countries.

⁴² Id. at 475–477, citing:

Executive Order 102, Section 1: Mandate. Consistent with the provisions of the Administrative Code of 1987 and RA 7160 (the Local Government Code), the DOH is hereby mandated to provide assistance to local government units (LGUs), people’s organization (PO) and other members of civic society in effectively implementing programs, projects and services that will:

a) promote the health and well-being of every Filipino;

b) prevent and control diseases among populations at risks;

c) protect individuals, families and communities exposed to hazards and risks that could affect their health; and

d) treat, manage and rehabilitate individuals affected by disease and disability.

Republic Act No. 9711, Section 5: To carry out the provisions of this Act, there is hereby created an office to be called the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) in the Department of Health (DOH). Said Administration shall be under the Office of the Secretary and shall have the following functions, powers and duties:

(a) To administer the effective implementation of this Act and of the rules and regulations issued pursuant to the same;

(b) To assume primary jurisdiction in the collection of samples of health products;

(c) To analyze and inspect health products in connection with the implementation of this Act;

(d) To establish analytical data to serve as basis for the preparation of health products standards, and to recommend standards of identity, purity, safety, efficacy, quality and fill of container;

(e) To issue certificates of compliance with technical requirements to serve as basis for the issuance of appropriate authorization and spot-check for compliance with regulations regarding operation of manufacturers, importers, exporters, distributors, wholesalers, drug outlets, and other establishments and facilities of health products, as determined by the FDA;

(h) To conduct appropriate tests on all applicable health products prior to the issuance of appropriate authorizations to ensure safety, efficacy, purity, and quality;

(i) To require all manufacturers, traders, distributors, importers, exporters, wholesalers, retailers, consumers, and non-consumer users of health products to report to the FDA any incident that reasonably indicates that said product has caused or contributed to the death, serious illness or serious injury to a consumer, a patient, or any person;

(j) To issue cease and desist orders motu proprio or upon verified complaint for health products, whether or not registered with the FDA: Provided, That for registered health products, the cease and desist order is valid for thirty (30) days and may be extended for sixty (60) days only after due process has been observed;

(k) After due process, to order the ban, recall, and/or withdrawal of any health product found to have caused the death, serious illness or serious injury to a consumer or patient, or is found to be imminently injurious, unsafe, dangerous, or grossly deceptive, and to require all concerned to implement the risk management plan which is a requirement for the issuance of the appropriate authorization;

(l) To strengthen the post market surveillance system in monitoring health products as defined in this Act and incidents of adverse events involving such products;

(m) To develop and issue standards and appropriate authorizations that would cover establishments, facilities and health products;

(n) To conduct, supervise, monitor and audit research studies on health and safety issues of health products undertaken by entities duly approved by the FDA;

(o) To prescribe standards, guidelines, and regulations with respect to information, advertisements and other marketing instruments and promotion, sponsorship, and other marketing activities about the health products as covered in this Act;

(p) To maintain bonded warehouses and/or establish the same, whenever necessary or appropriate, as determined by the director-general for confiscated goods in strategic areas of the country especially at major ports of entry; and

Petitioners argue that aside from respondents' noncompliance with its mandate under the Constitution and other relevant laws, respondents failed to perform "their own study and assessment on the effects of Dengvaxia before the [vaccination] program was rolled out."⁴³ They also claim that the procurement of Dengvaxia and the implementation of the immunization program were done haphazardly and were beset with anomalies.⁴⁴

Petitioners mainly ask for the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus.⁴⁵ Specifically, petitioners pray that respondents be ordered to: (1) "publicly disseminate, on a regular basis, the report of the Task Force created and designated to monitor and review the school-based immunization program involving Dengvaxia and submit the same to the House of Representatives and Senate Committees on Health[;]"⁴⁶ (2) "conduct further study and review on the safety and efficacy of Dengvaxia,"⁴⁷ which should be open to the public and subject to review by independent medical experts; (3) create a registry or list of all those who had been inoculated with Dengvaxia; (4) provide free medical services to all inoculated children and monitor any adverse effects caused by the vaccine; (5) provide free medical treatment and hospitalization to inoculated children if they suffer from a Dengvaxia-related illness; and (6) conduct "initial and free consultations of inoculated children" in all areas covered by the program.⁴⁸

Petitioners invoke this Court's power to "promulgate rules concerning the protection and enforcement of constitutional rights."⁴⁹ Although the writ of continuing mandamus is "a relief available only in environmental cases" pursuant to the Rules of Procedure on Environmental Cases, petitioners claim that "the importance and urgency of the relief sought...warrant [their] entitlement thereto."⁵⁰

They cite Metropolitan Manila Development Authority v. Concerned Residents of Manila Bay,⁵¹ emphasizing that even a writ of continuing mandamus was issued prior to the promulgation of the Rules of Procedure on Environmental Cases.⁵²

(q) To exercise such other powers and perform such other functions as may be necessary to carry out its duties and responsibilities under this Act.

In their Memorandum,⁵³ respondents argue that the Petition should be dismissed for violating the doctrine of hierarchy of courts.⁵⁴ They contend that the threat to the right to health, which may warrant the direct filing of the petition, was unfounded and baseless.⁵⁵

Respondents further assert that petitioners failed to cite any special or important reason to warrant a direct recourse to this Court. In any case, they claim that the issues raised by petitioners are not purely questions of law.⁵⁶ Citing Gios-Samar, Inc. v. Department of Transportation and Communications,⁵⁷ respondents aver that special and important reasons warrant original petitions before this Court only if the petition raised purely legal questions. Moreover, petitioners could have raised their concerns with respondents before they filed the Petition.⁵⁸

Respondents further assert that mandamus under Rule 65 and Rules of Procedure for Environmental Cases does not lie because the reliefs demanded by the petitioners are not ministerial acts.⁵⁹ For instance, the propriety of a “review by independent and competent medical experts”⁶⁰ of the safety and efficacy involves exercise of judgment. Respondents assert that they have full discretion in protecting and promoting the Filipino’s right to health and as experts, they are in a better position to carry out their mandate.⁶¹

Respondents claim that a writ of continuing mandamus is neither available to petitioners, considering that this may only be issued in connection with the enforcement or violation of environmental law.⁶²

Respondents add that this Court cannot issue the writ of continuing mandamus and grant the reliefs prayed for by petitioners because this will violate the separation of powers among the Executive, Legislative, and Judicial branches. Moreover, the reliefs sought by the petitioners would unduly burden this Court of supervising respondents who are not part of the Judiciary.⁶³

In any case, respondents assert that the Petition has been rendered moot because they already accomplished the reliefs sought by petitioners.⁶⁴

First, the Department of Health has been proactive in disseminating information regarding the dengue immunization program. Respondents cite Department of Health Administrative Order No. 2018-0008, a risk communication program on Dengvaxia. Moreover, the Department of Health has submitted reports of the immunization program to the Congress and has fully cooperated in the investigations.⁶⁵

Second, the Food and Drug Administration has been studying and reviewing the safety and efficacy of Dengvaxia.⁶⁶ It coordinates with Sanofi Pasteur for the submission of Periodic Safety Update Report as well as any global safety issues or alert from other national regulatory agency.⁶⁷ Further, as early as 2017, the Department of Health has created a taskforce mandated to “[r]eview and manage concerns related [to] the dengue immunization.”⁶⁸

Third, the Department of Health has already created a master list of children who were inoculated with Dengvaxia, but this cannot be released in view of the Data Privacy Act of 2012. The Department of Health also issued the Interim Guidelines on the Surveillance of Adverse Effects among Dengvaxia Vaccinees, where all vaccinees were identified and issued a Dengvaxia identification card. However, the National Privacy Commission issued an advisory to the Department of Health, declaring that the information contained in the master list is classified as sensitive personal information.⁶⁹

Fourth, the Department of Health has taken measures to ensure immediate assistance to vaccinees should they manifest adverse symptoms.⁷⁰ Respondents add that initial consultations of inoculated children would not address the health concerns brought about by the vaccination.⁷¹ Moreover, vaccinees are presently being monitored by the Department of Health and mechanisms are put in place for the early diagnosis, referral, and management of dengue, if any.⁷² The medical service for dengue-related symptoms are also provided for free.⁷³

Respondents add that the surveillance and healthcare will initially run for five years, and subsequent developments may prompt the Department of Health to amend its policies.⁷⁴

First, whether or not petitioners have legal standing to file the Petition;

Second, whether or not the Petition is an exemption from the doctrine on hierarchy of courts; and,

Finally, whether or not petitioners are entitled to the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus. Subsumed under this issue is whether or not the issuance of the writ violates the principle of separation of powers.

Legal standing is the “right of appearance in a court of justice on a given question.”⁷⁵ Parties possess “standing if they stand to be benefited if the case is resolved in their favor, or if they shall suffer should the case be decided against them.”⁷⁶

A party’s interest must be material. It must be “an interest in issue affected by the decree, as distinguished from mere interest in the question involved, or a mere incidental interest.”⁷⁷ Direct injury ensures that the “party who brings suit has such personal stake in the outcome of the controversy and, in effect, assures that concrete adverseness which sharpens the presentation of issues upon which the court depends for illumination of difficult constitutional questions.”⁷⁸

The requirement of legal standing is based on the doctrine of separation of powers. It also has a practical basis. In Provincial Bus Operators Association of the Philippines v. Department of Labor and Employment.⁷⁹

The requirements of legal standing . . . [is] “built on the principle of separation of powers, sparing as it does unnecessary interference or invalidation by the judicial branch of the actions rendered by its co-equal branches of government.” In addition, economic reasons justify the rule. Thus:

A lesser but not insignificant reason for screening the standing of persons who desire to litigate constitutional issues is economic in character. Given the sparseness of our resources, the capacity of courts to render efficient judicial service to our people is severely limited. For courts to indiscriminately open their doors to all types of suits and suitors is for them to unduly overburden their dockets, and ultimately render themselves ineffective dispensers of justice. To be sure, this is an evil that clearly confronts our judiciary today.

Standing in private suits requires that actions be prosecuted or defended in the name of the real party-in-interest, interest being “material interest or an interest in issue to be affected by the decree or judgment of the case[,] [not just] mere curiosity about the question involved.” Whether a suit is public or private, the parties must have “a present substantial interest,” not a “mere expectancy or a future, contingent, subordinate, or consequential interest.” Those who bring the suit must possess their own right to the relief sought.⁸⁰ (Citations omitted)

In Falcis III v. Civil Registrar General,⁸¹ the Court clarified that while the rule admits of exceptions for suits filed by taxpayers, legislators, or concerned citizens, parties must still claim some kind of injury-in-fact:

For concerned citizens, it is an allegation that the continuing enforcement of a law or any government act has denied the party some right or privilege to which they are entitled, or that the party will be subjected to some burden or penalty because of the law or act being complained of. For taxpayers, they must show “sufficient interest in preventing the illegal expenditure of money raised by taxation[.]” Legislators, meanwhile, must show that some government act infringes on the prerogatives of their office. Third-party suits must likewise be brought by litigants who have “sufficiently concrete interest” in the outcome of the dispute.⁸² (Citations omitted)

Here, petitioners have legal standing based on the direct injury they sustained for being inoculated with Dengvaxia. These petitioner-children’s health and welfare are at stake. They are directly affected whether or not the petition will be granted.

Thus, they possess the legal standing to challenge the immunization program and to pray for reliefs in connection with it.

The doctrine of hierarchy of courts demands parties to seek recourse first “from lower courts sharing concurrent jurisdiction with a higher court.”⁸³ This allows the Court to function as a court of last resort so that it can

“satisfactorily perform the functions assigned to it by the fundamental charter and immemorial tradition.”⁸⁴

The doctrine facilitates judicial efficiency as it “enables courts at each level to act in keeping with their peculiar competencies.”⁸⁵ Lower courts are better equipped to evaluate evidence and to review the determination of facts while this Court determines new doctrines and sharpens existing jurisprudence based on questions of laws raised before it. In The Diocese of Bacolod v. Commission on Elections.⁸⁶

The doctrine that requires respect for the hierarchy of courts was created by this court to ensure that every level of the judiciary performs its designated roles in an effective and efficient manner. Trial courts do not only determine the facts from the evaluation of the evidence presented before them. They are likewise competent to determine issues of law which may include the validity of an ordinance, statute, or even an executive issuance in relation to the Constitution. To effectively perform these functions, they are territorially organized into regions and then into branches. Their writs generally reach within those territorial boundaries. Necessarily, they mostly perform the all-important task of inferring the facts from the evidence as these are physically presented before them. In many instances, the facts occur within their territorial jurisdiction, which properly present the “actual case” that makes ripe a determination of the constitutionality of such action. The consequences, of course, would be national in scope. There are, however, some cases where resort to courts at their level would not be practical considering their decisions could still be appealed before the higher courts, such as the Court of Appeals.

The Court of Appeals is primarily designed as an appellate court that reviews the determination of facts and law made by the trial courts. It is collegiate in nature. This nature ensures more standpoints in the review of the actions of the trial court. But the Court of Appeals also has original jurisdiction over most special civil actions. Unlike the trial courts, its writs can have a nationwide scope. It is competent to determine facts and, ideally, should act on constitutional issues that may not necessarily be novel unless there are factual questions to determine.

This court, on the other hand, leads the judiciary by breaking new ground or further reiterating — in the light of new circumstances or in the light of some confusions of bench or bar — existing precedents. Rather than a court of first instance or as a repetition of the actions of the Court of Appeals, this court promulgates these doctrinal devices in order that it truly performs that role.

In other words, the Supreme Court’s role to interpret the Constitution and act in order to protect constitutional rights when these become exigent should not be emasculated by the doctrine in respect of the hierarchy of courts. That has never been the purpose of such doctrine.⁸⁷

Thus, while this Court shares original and concurrent jurisdiction with lower courts, litigants are not at liberty to invoke this Court's jurisdiction at the first instance. Direct invocation of this Court's original jurisdiction should be allowed only for exceptional reasons which are clearly and specifically pleaded by a party. In People v. Cuaresma:⁸⁸

This concurrence of jurisdiction is not, however, to be taken as according to parties seeking any of the writs an absolute, unrestrained freedom of choice of the court to which application therefor will be directed. . . . A direct invocation of the Supreme Court's original jurisdiction to issue these writs should be allowed only when there are special and important reasons therefor, clearly and specifically set out in the petition. This is established policy. It is a policy that is necessary to prevent inordinate demands upon the Court's time and attention which are better devoted to those matters within its exclusive jurisdiction, and to prevent further over-crowding of the Court's docket. . . . Indeed, the removal of the restriction on the jurisdiction of the Court of Appeals in this regard, supra — resulting from the deletion of the qualifying phrase, "in aid of its appellate jurisdiction" — was evidently intended precisely to relieve this Court pro tanto of the burden of dealing with applications for the extraordinary writs which, but for the expansion of the Appellate Court's corresponding jurisdiction, would have had to be filed with it.⁸⁹

Nevertheless, this Court has discretionary power and it can assume jurisdiction over petitions filed directly before it when warranted.⁹⁰ Gios-Samar summarized the exceptions:

- (1) when there are genuine issues of constitutionality that must be addressed at the most immediate time;
- (2) when the issues involved are of transcendental importance;
- (3) cases of first impression;
- (4) the constitutional issues raised are better decided by the Court;
- (5) exigency in certain situations;
- (6) the filed petition reviews the act of a constitutional organ;
- (7) when petitioners rightly claim that they had no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law that could free them from the injurious effects of respondents' acts in violation of their right to freedom of expression; [and]
- (8) the petition includes questions that are "dictated by public welfare and the advancement of public policy, or demanded by the broader interest of justice, or the orders complained of were found to be patent nullities, or the appeal was considered as clearly an inappropriate remedy."⁹¹

Jardeleza, En Banc], citing The Diocese of Bacolod v. Commission on Elections, 751 Phil. 301 (2015) [Per J. Leonen, En Banc].

In all these exceptions, the questions presented to this Court must be purely legal, regardless of the petition's transcendental importance. There should be no dispute and question with respect to the facts.⁹²

The Petition violates the doctrine of hierarchy of courts.

Rule 8, Section 2 of the Rules of Procedure for Environmental Cases provides original and concurrent jurisdiction to regional trial courts, the Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court over petitions for continuing mandamus. The doctrine of hierarchy of courts dictates that the Petition should have been filed first before the regional trial court.

Petitioners claim exception from the rule. They assert that the issues they raised are of transcendental importance, that a time element is involved, that there is no other plain, speedy, and adequate remedy, and that public welfare and public policy is at stake.

Notwithstanding these reasons, the Petition still fails. To resolve the issues in the Petition, questions of fact must be threshed out and evidence must be evaluated. A proceeding for the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus necessarily requires the submission of evidence and evaluation of facts.⁹³ Petitioners seek to compel respondents to do certain acts, but the determination of whether or not respondents have failed to abide by their legal duty with respect to the immunization program would involve factual matters which have not been established before any court.

In any case, even if we give due course to the Petition, it must still be dismissed.

⁹³ RULES OF PROCEDURE FOR ENVIRONMENTAL CASES, rule 8, sec. 1 provides:

Section 1. Petition for continuing mandamus. - When any agency or instrumentality of the government or officer thereof unlawfully neglects the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins as a duty resulting from an office, trust or station in connection with the enforcement or violation of an environmental law rule or regulation or a right therein, or unlawfully excludes another from the use or enjoyment of such right and there is no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the ordinary course of law, the person aggrieved thereby may file a verified petition in the proper court, alleging the facts with certainty, attaching thereto supporting evidence, specifying that the petition concerns an environmental law, rule or regulation, and praying that judgment be rendered commanding the respondent to do an act or series of acts until the judgment is fully satisfied, and to pay damages sustained by the petitioner by reason of the malicious neglect to perform the duties of the respondent, under the law, rules or regulations. The petition shall also contain a sworn certification of non-forum shopping.

implied in the division of powers among three government branches: the Legislative, Executive, and Judiciary.⁹⁵

Under this principle, each branch is “supreme within its own sphere,” having “exclusive cognizance of matters within its jurisdiction.”⁹⁶ “The principle presupposes mutual respect by and [among the three branches] and calls for them to be left alone to discharge their duties as they see fit.”⁹⁷

Thus, one branch cannot overstep and encroach upon the jurisdiction and function of another; otherwise, there may be a concentration of powers in a single branch which may aggrandize its power at the expense of another branch. In Belgica v. Ochoa:⁹⁸

“[T]he legislature has no authority to execute or construe the law, the executive has no authority to make or construe the law, and the judiciary has no power to make or execute the law.” The principle of separation of powers and its concepts of autonomy and independence stem from the notion that the powers of government must be divided to avoid concentration of these powers in any one branch; the division, it is hoped, would avoid any single branch from lording its power over the other branches or the citizenry. To achieve this purpose, the divided power must be wielded by co-equal branches of government that are equally capable of independent action in exercising their respective mandates. Lack of independence would result in the inability of one branch of government to check the arbitrary or self-interest assertions of another or others.⁹⁹ (Citations omitted)

Nevertheless, the separation of powers does not intend a detachment of the three branches.¹⁰⁰ The Constitution provides for a system of checks and balances to ensure that there is coordination among the branches of the government.¹⁰¹

Within our constitutional order, the Legislative enacts the law, the Executive enforces the law, and the Judiciary interprets and applies it to cases and controversies.¹⁰²

Meanwhile, judicial power belongs to the Supreme Court and other courts. Courts have the duty “to settle actual controversies involving rights which are legally demandable and enforceable, and to determine whether . . . there has been a grave abuse of discretion amounting to lack or excess of jurisdiction on the part of any branch or instrumentality of the Government.”¹⁰⁶

This Court cannot arrogate upon itself the power and responsibility of overseeing the entire government. In DENR v. DENR Region 12 Employees:¹⁰⁷

The Supreme Court should not be thought of as having been tasked with the awesome responsibility of overseeing the entire bureaucracy. Unless there is a clear showing of constitutional infirmity or grave abuse of discretion amounting to lack or excess of jurisdiction, the Court’s exercise of the judicial power, pervasive and limitless it may seem to be, still must succumb to the paramount doctrine of separation of powers.¹⁰⁸ (Citation omitted)

The Judiciary cannot take part in the execution of laws.¹⁰⁹ Courts cannot claim superiority on matters involving another agency’s technical expertise.¹¹⁰

In the same vein, courts will not interfere with discretionary acts of the Executive unless there is grave abuse of discretion amounting to lack or excess of jurisdiction.¹¹¹ Mandamus will not lie against the Legislative and Executive if it involves purely discretionary functions, as respect to a co-equal branch of government. In Knights of Rizal v. DMCI Homes, Inc.:¹¹²

It is the policy of the courts not to interfere with the discretionary executive acts of the executive branch unless there is a clear showing of grave abuse of discretion amounting to lack or excess of jurisdiction. Mandamus does not lie against the legislative and executive branches or their members acting in the exercise of their official discretionary functions. This emanates from the respect accorded by the judiciary to said branches as co-equal entities under the principle of separation of powers.

In De Castro v. Salas, we held that no rule of law is better established than the one that provides that mandamus will not issue to control the discretion of an officer or a court when honestly exercised and when such power and authority is not abused.¹¹³ (Citation omitted)

Only in highly exceptional cases does this Court grant mandamus to compel actions involving judgment and discretion. Even then, the Court can only order a party “to act, but not to act one way or the other.”¹¹⁴

IV

The concept of continuing mandamus was introduced in the 2008 case of Metropolitan Manila Development Authority v. Concerned Residents of Manila Bay.¹¹⁵ Here, respondent filed a complaint against petitioner-government agencies for their alleged neglect in abating the pollution in Manila Bay. The Regional Trial Court and the Court of Appeals ordered the petitioners to clean up and rehabilitate Manila Bay.¹¹⁶

Affirming the lower courts, this Court ruled that petitioner-government agencies may be compelled “to perform[] their mandates and duties towards cleaning up the Manila Bay and preserving the quality of its water to the ideal level.”¹¹⁷ It held that under the principle of continuing mandamus, “the Court may, under extraordinary circumstances, issue directives with the end in view of ensuring that its decision would not be set to naught by administrative inaction or indifference.”¹¹⁸ It cites Supreme Court of India cases *Vineet Narain v. Union of India*¹¹⁹ and *M.C. Mehta v. Union of India*¹²⁰ which were used to “enforce directives of the court to clean up the length of the Ganges River[.]”¹²¹

Accordingly, this Court issued a writ of continuing mandamus, ordering several government agencies to “clean-up, rehabilitate, and preserve Manila Bay, and restore and maintain its waters to . . . level . . . fit for swimming, skin-diving, and other forms of contact recreation.”¹²² The heads of government agencies were directed to submit to this Court quarterly reports of the activities they have undertaken.¹²³

The writ of continuing mandamus was subsequently incorporated in the Rules of Procedure for Environmental Cases. The Rules define a writ of continuing mandamus as a court issuance in an environmental case which directs any governmental agency or instrumentality or officer to “perform an act or series of acts decreed by final judgment which shall remain effective until judgment is fully satisfied.”¹²⁴

A petition for continuing mandamus may be filed when a government agency, instrumentality, or officer unlawfully neglects the performance of an act in connection with the enforcement or violation of the environmental law, regulation, or right, or excludes another person from the use or enjoyment of that right.¹²⁵ It “should mainly involve an environmental and other related law, rule or regulation or a right therein.”¹²⁶

Continuing mandamus is this Court’s exercise of power to carry its jurisdiction into effect under Rule 135, Section 6 of the Rules of Court. The rule states:

Section 6. Means to carry jurisdiction into effect. — When by law jurisdiction is conferred on a court or judicial officer, all auxiliary writs, processes and other means necessary to carry it into effect may be employed by such court or officer; and if the procedure to be followed in the exercise of such jurisdiction is not specifically pointed out by law or by these rules, any suitable process or mode of proceeding may be adopted which appears comfortable to the spirit of the said law or rules.

The Rules contemplate situations where environmental law enforcement may be inadequate. A judicial component may be required to settle questions on the propriety of the agency’s action or inaction.¹²⁷ The rationale of the rules explains:

Environmental law highlights the shift in the focal-point from the initiation of regulation by Congress to the implementation of regulatory programs by the appropriate government agencies. Thus, a government agency’s inaction, if any, has serious implications on the future of environmental law enforcement. Private individuals, to the extent that they seek to change the scope of the regulatory process, will have to rely on such agencies to take the initial incentives, which may require a judicial component. Accordingly, questions regarding the propriety of an agency’s action or inaction will need to be analyzed.¹²⁸

Similar to special civil actions for certiorari, prohibition, and mandamus, the Rules of Procedure on Environmental cases require that the petition should be sufficient in form and substance; otherwise, it may be dismissed outright.¹²⁹ In Dolot v. Paje:¹³⁰

Sufficiency of substance, on the other hand, necessitates that the petition must contain substantive allegations specifically constituting an actionable neglect or omission and must establish, at the very least, a prima facie basis for the issuance of the writ, viz.: (1) an agency or instrumentality of government or its officer unlawfully neglects the performance of an act or unlawfully excludes another from the use or enjoyment of a right; (2) the act to be performed by the government agency, instrumentality or its officer is specifically enjoined by law as a duty; (3) such duty results from an office, trust or station in connection with the enforcement or violation of an environmental law, rule or regulation or a right therein; and (4) there is no other plain, speedy and adequate remedy in the course of law.¹³¹ (Citation omitted)

When a writ of continuing mandamus is issued and the judgment has attained finality, the court “retains jurisdiction over the case to ensure that the government agency concerned is performing its tasks as mandated by law and to monitor the effective performance of said tasks.”¹³² In essence, the writ is a “command of continuing compliance with a final judgment.”¹³³ The judgment will be satisfied only upon the final return of the writ when the court deems that the judgment has been fully implemented.¹³⁴

Mandamus does not lie unless the acts to be performed are enjoined by law. The duty of respondent-government agencies to perform the acts must be clearly provided for by law. Neither petitioners nor this Court can order respondent-government agencies how to perform their functions with respect to any immunization program; otherwise, this Court will effectively usurp the power and prerogatives of the executive in their enactment of their programs.

This Court cannot exercise supervisory powers over executive departments and agencies. These administrative agencies possess the competence, experience, and specialization in their respective fields.¹³⁵ On the other hand, this Court does not have the expertise to resolve these technical issues.¹³⁶ In Knights of Rizal, we held:

¹²⁹ Abogado v. Department of Environment and Natural Resources, G.R. No. 246209, September 3, 2019 [Per J. Leonen, En Banc].

The Court cannot “substitute its judgment for that of said officials who are in a better position to consider and weigh the same in the light of the authority specifically vested in them by law.” Since the Court has “no supervisory power over the proceedings and actions of the administrative departments of the government,” it “should not generally interfere with purely administrative and discretionary functions.” The power of the Court in mandamus petitions does not extend “to direct the exercise of judgment or discretion in a particular way or the retraction or reversal of an action already taken in the exercise of either.”¹³⁷ (Citations omitted)

Substantially, a petition for the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus involves a government office or officer who “neglects the performance of an act which the law specifically enjoins” and the writ commands this office or person “to do an act or series of acts” to satisfy the law.¹³⁸

In Segovia v. Climate Change Commission,¹³⁹ this Court reiterated that the duty sought to be enforced by a writ of continuing mandamus must be clearly provided by law:

Mandamus lies to compel the performance of duties that are purely ministerial in nature, not those that are discretionary, and the official can only be directed by mandamus to act but not to act one way or the other. The duty being enjoined in mandamus must be one according to the terms provided in the law itself. Thus, the recognized rule is that, in the performance of an official duty or act involving discretion, the corresponding official can only be directed by mandamus to act, but not to act one way or the other.¹⁴⁰ (Citations omitted)

Litigants must establish the breach committed by the government office or officer by alleging and substantiating the acts falling within the law which it neglected. This is satisfied when they identify the parameters and end-goals which the law allows. It involves proving before the courts the inability of the government agency or officer to perform this duty and the irreparable damage that will result from this inaction.

A writ of continuing mandamus is not infinite. Any petition should be precise and should include clear and judicially verifiable parameters for when the duration of the mandamus will end. The parameters should always be based on empirical proof, as well as reasonable scientific grounds. This is more apparent in petitions involving environmental rights. Various schools of thought are involved in the protection of the environment and these result to different approaches in resolving environmental issues.¹⁴¹ Thus, litigants must clearly demonstrate the irreparable damage they seek to avoid, indicate the specific remedies, how they are satisfied, and their scientific bases.

In sum, every petition for a writ of continuing mandamus should clearly allege: (a) serious and systematic inability of the respondents to meet their constitutional or statutory obligations to protect and preserve the environment despite repeated demands; (b) convincing circumstances that the non-issuance of the writ will result to irreparable damage to our ecology within the scope provided in our rules; and (c) specific, measurable, attainable, realistic, and timebound objectives that have rational relation to the irreparable damage sought to be avoided.

The Petition fails to comply with these.

Foremost, petitioners cannot pray for the issuance of a writ of continuing mandamus because the controversy does not involve the enforcement or violation of an environmental law or right. While admitting that their cause of action does not arise in relation to an environmental law, petitioners bank on the importance and urgency of the relief sought.¹⁴² However, the Rules of Procedure on Environmental Cases clearly requires that the petition is anchored on a violation or enforcement of environmental law. This Petition mainly invokes alleged violations on the right to health. Thus, petitioners cannot resort to this kind of writ.

In any case, even if we treat this as a petition for mandamus under Rule 65 of the Rules of Court, it must still fail. The acts sought by the petitioners to be performed are not enjoined by law as a duty. They are not ministerial acts.

To reiterate, petitioners pray for the following: (1) public and regular dissemination of the Task Force's report on the Dengvaxia immunization program; (2) submission of the report to the Congress; (3) creation of a list of children inoculated with Dengvaxia; (4) provision of free medical services to these children and monitor any adverse effect caused by Dengvaxia; (5) provision of free medical treatment and hospitalization if they suffer from a Dengvaxia-related illness; and (6) initial and free consultations of inoculated children.

These specific acts are not laid down in any of the laws and instruments cited by the petitioners. To reiterate, this Court cannot claim superiority over respondent-government agencies and decide for them the policies in managing the immunization program. The reliefs prayed for by the petitioners involve purely administrative and discretionary functions.

¹⁴² Rollo, pp. 479-480.

Moreover, we cannot find any serious or systematic inability of respondents in the performance of their duties. Considering that these are agencies possessing the technical knowledge and specialization in their fields, the judgments of the Food and Drug Administration and the Department of Health are given significant weight and should not be impulsively disturbed. When the vaccine was approved by the Food and Drug Administration, there is a reasonable presumption that the approval is based on science and the subsequent recommendation by the Department of Health enjoys a presumption of constitutionality. The presumption becomes heavier and more pronounced when there is a public health crisis such as a pandemic. Therefore, litigants who challenge the rolling out of the vaccine, as mandated by the Department of Health as experts in the field, must overcome the heavy presumption of constitutionality.

Petitioners failed to ground their petition on scientific and empirical bases. They did not present studies and research which demonstrates that the vaccine failed to satisfy safety and health standards. There are no sufficient scientific grounds proving grave error in the Food and Drug Administration's and the Department of Health's approval and distribution of the vaccine.

In any case, the reliefs sought by petitioners were already satisfied by respondents. In their Memoranda, respondents submit that they have been disseminating public information regarding the immunization program under Department of Health Administrative Order No. 2018-0008. Moreover, the Department of Health has submitted their reports to the Congress while the Food and Drug Administration has been studying and reviewing the safety and efficacy of Dengvaxia. The Department of Health has also been monitoring the children inoculated with Dengvaxia and has offered medical services to them for free. A master list of children inoculated with Dengvaxia was also created but due to privacy concerns, it cannot be released to the public as advised by the National Privacy Commission.

In all, this Court refrains from intervening in the discretionary functions and prerogatives of the Executive department. Moreover, considering that mandamus may only be granted to enforce clear legal rights provided by law, this Court should dismiss the Petition for Mandamus.

ACCORDINGLY, the Petition for Mandamus is DISMISSED.

SO ORDERED.
